SHELTON'S AUTOMOTIVE TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM NAMES NEW INSTRUCTOR

A person with above average intelligence and the willingness to see a project through from start to finish is wanted in the automotive technology program. Those who qualify may earn between $35,000-$50,000 a year, according to Jerry Adams, Shelton State Community College's new instructor of automotive technology.

Adams, who comes to Shelton from General Motors Training Center in Atlanta, Georgia, is working to revitalize and update Shelton's automotive technology program. Plans call for revisions to be completed by Summer quarter registration on June 10.

New segments that will be added to the curriculum include working on a computerized braking system, learning how to install air bags, offering additional computer courses, and working on a four-wheel drive alignment system.

"As far as the air bags, they are a factory assembled item the students will learn to install. As part of the program, we will also show the students how the system works. In the future, we also hope to offer a service advisory course where we can teach students certain areas of body work," Adams said.

"Now is the perfect time for someone to go into the field of automotive technology. The job market as a whole is not good right now. Automotive technology offers good jobs for qualified workers. In a service department in this area, the labor rate is between $30-$40 an hour and the technician generally gets 35-50% of that amount."

"There are also scholarships for women who are interested in going into the field," Adams said. "In addition, we will also offer a course for women who are not interested in working in the field but simply want to know more of the basics about a car. We also plan to offer courses that will be of interest to senior citizens."

"Someone who is interested in entering this program should be a high school graduate with a good B or C average. They should also possess good reading skills because so many of the training manuals are written on a 12th or 13th grade reading level," Adams said.

Adams is originally from Albertville, Alabama and is a graduate of the University of Alabama at Birmingham with a BS degree in education. He is currently working on a masters degree in psychology.

One of America's favorite musicals, OKLAHOMA, will be presented May 16-17 by the music department of Shelton State Community College. Both performances will be held in the auditorium of the Skyland Boulevard Campus.

The performance on Thursday, May 16, will be a dinner theater production with tickets at $10.00 per person or $50.00 per patron. Dinner will be served at 7 p.m. and the performance will begin at 7:30 p.m.

On Friday, May 17, the second performance of OKLAHOMA will be presented by the college. This production will not include dinner, and tickets will sell for $5.00 general admission, and $3.00 for students and senior adults.

Set in the Midwest around the turn of the century, OKLAHOMA is a love story which depicts the conflict between the farmers and the cowmen as the territory attempts to achieve statehood. With delightful comedy and memorable music, OKLAHOMA brings to life an important time in America's history.
